ACTIVITY 43

Elements of the Work Environment: Survey for Self-Analysis Paper

Purpose of this unit: This unit gives you experience in evaluating the importance of environment in choosing a career. Some environments are glamorous and some are not. In some careers the nature of the work dictates the environment, but in many cases the environment will vary with the particular place where you choose to work. There are times you can use the same skill in many different environments. People vary in how much they care about the environment or conditions in which they work. It is important to know what bothers you, what you can tolerate, and what kind of environment you would really enjoy if you had the choice.

Directions: For each element of the work environment listed, circle the description that most appeals to you. Under those descriptions you did not choose, explain why you would not want to work in that type of environment.

ACTIVITY 53

Commitment Self-Inventory

Purpose of this unit: It is important to help you see how commitments vary with different jobs. People may be so caught up in the value of their work and/or the satisfaction they receive that they willingly endure working conditions that may be far from ideal. This may mean the person puts herself or himself at risk physically, emotionally, financially, and/or socially. You will have the opportunity to focus on commitments that are important to you and see how they relate to different careers.

    Yes _______  No _______

16. Would you be willing to work long, hard hours because the job demands it, yet your pay is quite low?
    Yes _______  No _______

A. What is a commitment?

B. What are some commitments you have already made in your own life?

C. Circle the number of your yes responses.

1  2  3  4  5  6  7  8  9  10  11  12  13  14  15  16

The more yes answers you have, the higher the probability that you might be the kind of person who gains satisfaction from careers in which a person might be asked or required to give up some of the pleasures of life. Explain why you feel you may or may not be this type of person.
